HEDJ

The word Hedj in the Ancient Egyptian language stands for the white color. The color was made from chalk mixed with gypsum, often employed as a lightener for other hues.

There are three narratives behind the use of white for the Ancient Egyptians. In sacred rituals and festivals, priests wore white, and the objects used in rituals (such as bowls, plates, altars, tables) were made of white alabaster to symbolize purity, simplicity and clarity. The White Crown of Upper Egypt represented the richness and omnipotence of the rulers of Upper Egypt.
